Expedition 6000

A multi-day journey combining trekking, visits to villages, and ascents, all leading up to a 6,000-meter objective. The standard itinerary spans ten days, with options for longer durations; it cannot be condensed into a short trip of three to five days.

Your itinerary

First Block · Traversing the Terrain

The route begins at "Cornisas" and the Río Salado system, including camping and the connection toward the Río Grande. These stages allow for getting to know the group and evaluating individual responses to physical exertion.

Second Block · Villages and the High Plateau (Altiplano)

The historical route continues through Caspana, El Tatio, and Talabre. Overnight stays and meals are organized by stage and require confirmed reservations and access.

Third Block · Mountain Ascent

Lejía, Láscar, and Soquete serve as preparatory milestones. Consecutive ascents without rest are not guaranteed; the plan is adapted based on acclimatization and prevailing conditions.

Final Objective

Pili or Aucanquilcha are offered as alternatives (not both). A technical program is established, covering the approach, logistical support, the summit attempt, and the return, with buffer days included if necessary.

DURATION

Historical itinerary: 10 days; adaptable.
