PRIVATE EXPERIENCE / ENGLISH

Cerro Toco

A high-altitude ascent, involving a vehicle approach followed by a hike to the objective, subject to prevailing conditions. Although the approach reduces the walking distance, the physical exertion takes place in a high-mountain environment.

Your itinerary

Vehicle approach.

The guide coordinates the departure from San Pedro, including any necessary stops. At the trailhead, we review the equipment, assess how everyone is handling the altitude, and confirm the ascent and return plan.

Ascent.

We climb at a steady pace, with breaks to hydrate, add layers, and check on each participant's well-being. At high altitudes, even a short trail can become demanding; distance alone does not determine the level of difficulty.

Objective for the day.

Whenever possible, the high point offers views of the surrounding volcanoes and the high plateau (altiplano). The extent of the ascent depends on wind conditions, visibility, and how well the group is adapting.

Descent.

We return to the vehicle via the planned route and head back to San Pedro. The guide may decide to begin the descent earlier if conditions or a participant's health require it.
